APRIL 2024

Message from the Dean

DR. MARY FARMER-KAISER

'Tis the season of high highs and low lows.

The excitement of thesis and dissertation defenses, job interviews, and impending graduations is in the air. Yet, now is the time when disappointments that accompany tough revisions, tight deadlines, job rejections, and delayed graduations can cause some melancholy too.

Nelson Mandela's words to the right capture well the importance of both the highs and the lows in our lives. Often our strength reveals itself most not as we achieve success, but rather when we rise in the face of disappointment. Without question, resilience (perhaps even more than brilliance) is essential in grad school. This inner strength is what helps us weather the storms of being challenged or seeing the sun set on one of our dreams. Give yourself permission to reflect in these dark moments.

As we navigate this last month of the academic year, I encourage you (and myself too) to remember that setbacks are not the end of the road but mere detours on our journey. They are opportunities to grow, to adapt, to revisit our definition(s) of success, and to persevere. A new day will come and, with it, the sun will shine again.

Together, let's test our resolve. We've proven time and time again that we have the fortitude to keep at the research, the writing, the job search, and so much more. Although there may be moments when we are unsure about what lies ahead, it is the journey--with high highs and low lows--that defines our purpose.

Dr. MFK

"Do not judge me
by my success,
judge me by how many times I fell down and got back up again."

GRAD PROGRAM

ENGLISH

Congratulations to the English Department! Our English grad students really showed up during GSAW! They entered the Research Showcase, offered love for their programs and faculty, attended events, and more. We share your love, and we're looking forward to hosting a department lunch in your honor. Let's celebrate finding a new home for the traveling trophy and claim that title, English faculty and grad students! #ULGradLove2024
